Texas Population Change in the 1980s:
The 1990 Census

Overview

The United States Census Bureau has officially reported that on April 1, 1990, a total of 16,986,510 persons called Texas home, an increase of 2,757,319 or 19.4 percent since 1980[1]. The increase represents the continuation of a 140 year tradition, as once again the rate of population growth in Texas outpaced the 9.8 percent rate of population growth in the United States for a decade. As a result, Texas remains the third most populous state in the Nation, trailing California with 29,760,021 residents and New York with 17,990,455 residents.

Harris County remained the State's most populous county with 2,818,199 residents, up 408,652 or 17.0 percent since 1980. Dallas (1,852,810), Bexar (1,185,394) and Tarrant (1,170,183) counties also posted 1990 populations in excess of one million persons. Of the ten most populous Texas counties, Denton and Collin Counties had the largest percentage increase in population, 91.1 and 82.6 percent respectively, since 1980.

Houston remained the State's largest city with 1,630,533 persons, an increase of 35,409 or 2.2 percent since 1980. Dallas (1,006,877), San Antonio (935,933), El Paso (515,342), and Austin (465,622) were the next most populous cities in the State[2]. The rank order of these five cities remained unchanged from 1980 with the exception of Austin which moved ahead of Fort Worth (477,619) to become the State's fifth largest city.

Of the State's 10 largest cities (the five noted above, plus Fort Worth, Arlington, Corpus Christi, Lubbock, and Garland), Arlington experienced the largest percentage increase at 63.5 percent. Among cities over 100,000, Plano had the largest percentage increase with 78.0 percent.

[1] The population counts set forth here are subject to possible correction for undercount or overcount. The United States Department of Commerce is considering whether to correct these counts and will publish corrected counts, if any, not later than July 15, 1991.

[2] The population counts referenced in this report are based on the "Thank You, America" count released by the United States Census Bureau. Population for places include only incorporated cities and towns and do not include Census Designated Places (CDPs). Data for CDPs will be available in subsequent reports.

Among cities with populations greater than 20,000, Carrollton, Bedford, Round Rock, Grapevine, Sugar Land, Friendswood, and Rowlett each experienced a population increase in excess of 100 percent from 1980 to 1990.

The State

The State's 19.4 percent increase in population during the 1980s, while a considerable decrease from the 27.1 percent increase experienced during the 1970s, was only slightly below the 21.6 percent average per decade experienced for the decades from 1950 to 1980. The largest percentage increase during the century was 27.8 percent which occurred in the period from 1900-1910. However, only two decades since Texas became a state, the 1930s (with a 10.1 percent increase in population) and the 1960s (which experienced a 16.9 percent increase in population), produced smaller decennial percentage increases than did the 1980s. The State's increase of 2,757,319 was the second largest numerical increase this century, surpassed only by the 3,032,461 increase experienced in the 1970s (see Table 1).

In terms of numerical change during the 1980s, the State ranked third behind California, with an increase of 6.1 million residents, and Florida, with an increase of 3.2 million residents. Nevada led the Nation in terms of its percentage change from the 1980 census with an increase of 50.1 percent, followed by Alaska, with an increase of 36.9 percent, and Arizona, with an increase of 34.8 percent. Florida and California ranked fourth and fifth with increases of 32.8 and 25.7 percent respectively. New Hampshire, with an increase of 20.5 percent, was the only state outside of the South or West to appear on the list of the 10 fastest growing states in the Nation from 1980 to 1990. Texas 19.4 percent growth was the seventh fastest in percentage terms. The State was followed by Georgia, with an increase of 18.4 percent, Utah, which increased its population by 17.9 percent, and Washington, which increased its population by 17.8 percent from 1980 to 1990 (see Tables 2-5).

Texas Counties

During the decade, 156 Texas counties gained population, while 98 lost population, compared to the decade of the 1970s in which 210 counties gained population while 44 lost population. In total, 135 Texas counties experienced net outmigration (more people moving out of the county than moving in to the county) during the 1980s compared to 84 counties in the 1970s (see Table 6).

Harris County maintained its position as the State's most populous county with 2,818,199 persons, an increase of 17.0 percent from 1980 to 1990. Dallas (1,842,810), Bexar (1,185,394), Tarrant (1,170,103), and Travis (576,407) were the next largest counties in the State. Taken together, these five largest counties accounted for 44.9 percent of the State's total population, compared to 44.2 percent in 1980 (see Tables 7-10).

Harris, with an increase of 408,652 residents, Tarrant (309,223), Dallas (296,420), Bexar (196,594), and Travis (156,834) were the five counties with the largest population increases in numerical terms. Denton County led the State in terms of the largest percentage increase during the decade with a 91.1 percent increase, followed by Collin (82.6), Williamson (82.4), Rockwall (76.2), and Fort Bend (72.7) Counties.

Of the 98 counties in the State which lost population during the decade, Jefferson County, with a decrease of -11,541 residents, lost the most residents, followed by Lamb (-3,597), Orange (-3,329), Kleberg (-3,084), and Hale (-2,921) Counties. The five counties with the largest percentage losses in population were Hall (-30.2 percent), Hemphill (-29.9), Dickens (-27.4), Cottle (-23.8), and Briscoe (-23.6).

In general, as is evident from examining Figure 1, the counties that increased most rapidly were suburban counties. Rural counties were the most likely to have either slow population growth or population decline.

Texas Cities

Among the State's 1,170 incorporated places, 630 (or 53.9 percent) gained population, while 535 lost population from 1980 to 1990. Five new places (El Cenizo, Redwater, Nevada, Rangerville, and Round Mountain) were incorporated during the decade. San Antonio had the largest numerical increase, adding 150,056 residents during the decade, followed by Austin with an increase of 120,129 residents. El Paso ranked fifth in numerical increase with a gain of 90,083 residents. The remaining seven of the State's ten cities with the largest numerical gains were in the Dallas-Forth Worth Metroplex. Dallas, with a gain of 102,800 residents ranked third in the State, followed by Arlington (with a gain of 101,608 residents), Forth Worth (62,455), Plano (56,384), Irving (45,094), Garland (41,793), and Carrollton (41,575) (see Tables 11-14).

Of the 535 communities in Texas that lost population during the decade, Port Arthur (-4,329), Orange (-4,247) and Beaumont (-3,779) ranked first through third. Kingsville (-3,582) and Galveston (-2,832) completed the list of the top five cities in terms of numerical population loss.

Opdyke West registered the largest percentage gain in population of any community in Texas during the 1980s with an increase of 2,400 percent. Opdyke West had a population of 4 in 1980 and by 1990 had grown to 100 persons. In total, 62 cities posted population gains in excess of 100 percent during the decade. Carrollton was the largest city to grow by more than 100 percent, increasing from a population of 40,594 in 1980 to 82,169 in 1990.

Edmonson which had a population of 291 in 1980 compared to 107 in 1990 had the largest percentage decrease in population with a loss of 63.2 percent of its 1980 residents. Forty-nine cities lost over one-quarter of their population during the decade with the largest city among them being Sonora which had a population of 3,856 in 1980 compared to 2,751 in 1990, representing a decrease of 28.7 percent.

Population Trends by City Size

The 1980s saw a continuation of a trend in which increases in population are most common in the State's largest cities. Of those cities in excess of 100,000 in population, 94.7 percent increased in population for the decade compared to 90.0 percent for the period 1970 to 1980. Among cities with populations from 25,001 to 100,000, 89.8 percent increased their populations from 1980 to 1990, compared to 83.4 percent from 1970 to 1980. By contrast, of those cities with a population of less than 1,000, 54.0 percent gained population from 1980 to 1990 compared to 80.6 percent from 1970 to 1980 (see Table 15).

As the number of cities experiencing population growth during the decade tended to vary by city size, so too did the components of growth in different types of counties. In total, metropolitan-central city counties (counties containing the central city of a Metropolitan Statistical Area) accounted for 68.4 percent of the Texas population in 1990, the same percentage as in 1980. In absolute terms, metropolitan-central city counties experienced an increase of 1,833,810 persons. (See Tables 16 and 17.) Of that change, 76.0 percent of the increase was a result of natural increase (births minus deaths), compared to 24.0 percent resulting from net migration. In metropolitan-suburban counties (counties within a Metropolitan Statistical Area, but not containing the central city), which accounted for 13.3 percent of the State's total population in 1990 compared to 11.1 in 1980, the components of population change were quite different. In metropolitan-suburban counties, 31.8 percent of the 675,777 population increase was a result of natural increase, while 68.2 percent of the growth was due to migration from other counties.

Among nonmetropolitan counties (counties that are not a part of a Metropolitan Statistical Area), the patterns of change were diverse. In 1990, nonmetropolitan counties that are adjacent to metropolitan-central city or metropolitan-suburban counties contained 2,051,706 residents. While their population increased by a total of 164,759 from 1980 to 1990, the percentage of the total population of the State accounted for by such counties decreased from 13.3 to 12.1 percent. Of the numerical increase, 75.5 percent was a result of natural population increase, with 24.5 percent being as a result of net migration. Nonmetropolitan counties that are not adjacent to metropolitan-central city or metropolitan-suburban counties also experienced a decline in terms of their total percentage of the Texas population, decreasing from 7.3 percent in 1980 to 7.1 percent in 1990. Furthermore, of the 32,973 population gain in such counties during the decade, a natural population increase of 52,353 was off-set by a net outmigration of 19,380.

Population Changes in Metropolitan Statistical Areas

In 1980, 79.5 percent, or 11,307,938 persons, lived in one of the State's 28 Metropolitan Statistical Areas (MSAs), compared to 81.7 percent of the population, or 13,867,055 persons, in 1990. (All comparisons are made using the 1990 definition of Metropolitan Statistical Areas.) The Houston MSA remained the State's largest with a population of 3,301,937 in 1990, an increase of 566,171, or 20.7 percent from 1980. The Dallas MSA, however, posted the largest numerical gain during the decade with an increase of 591,610 (or 34.3 percent) from a population of 1,957,378 in 1980 to 2,553,362 in 1990. In terms of percentage increases, the Austin MSA, with an increase of 45.6 percent during the decade, showed the largest gain (see Tables 18 and 19).

Only one MSA, Beaumont-Port Arthur, experienced a net loss of population during the decade. The Beaumont-Port Arthur MSA's loss was due to a natural increase in population of 27,315 being off-set by an outmigration of 41,586 persons. In fact, the Beaumont-Port Arthur MSA was one of nine MSAs to experience outmigration during the 1980s. The others were Abilene, Amarillo, Brazoria, Corpus Christi, Killeen-Temple, Longview-Marshall, Lubbock, Odessa, Tyler, and Wichita Falls. However, each of these latter MSAs had sufficient natural increase in population to compensate for outmigration so that they had population growth from 1980 to 1990.

Summary

High levels of inmigration in the early 1980s allowed Texas to continue to experience population growth from 1980 to 1990 that was greater than that of the Nation as a whole and greater than that of all but a handful of other states. However, economic conditions in the mid- to latter part of the decade caused an actual reversal in migration flows for the State as a whole for a few years and, as a result, the population increase for the entire decade was less than that experienced in the 1970-1980 period and less than what may have been expected based on the experience of the early 1980s. Nevertheless, when the entire decade of 1980 to 1990 is considered, Texas remained among the three fastest growing States in the Nation in terms of absolute population increase.

Population in Texas counties continued their trend toward a more urban/suburban population concentration with increases in population most common in larger cities and the areas immediately surrounding them. Conversely, nonmetropolitan counties not adjacent to a metropolitan area were clearly more likely to lose population than counties in metropolitan areas.

Trends similar to those for the 1980s taken as a whole are expected to continue during the 1990s. Texas is likely to continue to become a more urban state with many rural counties losing population. The State will continue to experience significant population increases on a statewide basis (although not to the extent seen in the late 1970s and early 1980s) and its rate of growth is expected to continue to outpace the Nation's rate of growth. Finally, Texas will continue to be among the Nation's leading states in terms of population growth and a center for public and private sector market and service expansion.

Table 6: The Number of Counties in Texas with Population Decline and Net Outmigration by Decade, 1960 to 1990

	Counties with Population Decline		Counties with Net Outmigration
Time Period	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
1960-70	146	57.5	180	70.9
1970-80	44	17.3	84	33.1
1980-90	98	38.6	135	53.1

Note: Births and deaths were estimated by taking 1980-89 births and deaths and extrapolating the values to produce an estimate of January - March 1990 births and deaths. Natural increase is the difference between births and deaths while net migration was derived by taking the difference between the 1980 and 1990 Census counts and subtracting natural increase.

Table 17: Population Counts 1980 and 1990, Population Change, Natural Increase, and Net Migration 1980 to 1990 in Counties in Texas by Metropolitan Status and Adjacency

Metropolitan Status and Adjacency*	Census Count 1980	Census Count 1990	1980-90 Population Change	1980-90 Natural Increase	1980-90 Net Migration

Nonmetropolitan Nonadjacent	1,034,776	1,067,749	32,973	52,353	-19,380

* Metropolitan Status and Adjacency as defined in the 1990 Census.

Note: Births and deaths were estimated by taking 1980-89 births and deaths and extrapolating the 1989 values to produce an estimate of January - March 1990 births and deaths. Natural increase is the difference between births and deaths, while net migration was derived by taking the difference between the 1980 and 1990 Census counts and subtracting natural increase.

* Metropolitan Statistical Area as defined in the 1990 Census.

Note: Births and deaths were estimated by taking 1980-89 births and deaths and extrapolating the 1989 values to produce an estimate of January - March 1990 births and deaths. Natural increase is the difference between births and deaths, while net migration was derived by taking the difference between the 1980 and 1990 Census counts and subtracting natural increase.
